

Windows 7 System Tray

It's nice that Windows 7 keeps all of your system tray icons hidden under that little arrow next to your clock, but what if there's a program in there you want to keep an eye on?

You can't be going over there and clicking that arrow every time you want to look, now, can you? Sounds like a waste of time to me, but thankfully Windows 7 is also forgiving in that it lets you move your system tray icons back down onto your Task bar individually!

Simply click the little arrow to expand the System Tray box, grab the icon of the program you want to move onto the task bar and drag it down there!
Now you can keep tabs on the important stuff!